
Eye on Industry

Bartlett Named “A Woman of Influence”

Epicurean Group founder and CEO Mary Clark Bartlett received a 2014 Woman of Influence award from the Silicon Valley Business Journal. Bartlett was chosen for her business acumen and success, as well as her strong commitment to the environment and to the Silicon Valley community.

The awards, given at a ceremony at the San Jose McEnergy Convention Center, spotlight 100 women in Silicon Valley each year who are “making the business community better,” said James MacGregor, publisher, Silicon Valley Business Journal. “The 2014 class is one of the most remarkable groups of people I can remember us finding.”

Linda Taaffe, who spearheaded the project, said, “Mary was able to build and maintain her business during a time when many others in her industry did not find success. And, she is an influential woman who gives back to the community.”

Epicurean Group, a women- and minority-owned sustainable foodservice management company, serves more than 40 corporate and educational restaurants and cafés in Northern California, and is celebrating a decade of growth. The company focuses on using sustainable and organic food that is locally grown.

“I’m thrilled to receive this award,” said Bartlett, “and to be recognized for the work Epicurean Group has done to support the environment, provide healthy food for our clients and encourage sustainability in our community.”

ON-CAMPUS
HOSPITALITY

Reprinted from the July 2014 issue of On-Campus Hospitality
©Executive Business Media